THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

by Stan Schepers, APC President

Hello everyone, this month we start off our hunting season. First up is our "novice hunt". In preparation for that hunt I'd like to go over a few things that I think you should look at and think about if you are one of the novices going on this hunt. A predator can see better, hear better and smell better than you and when I say better I mean 100 times better. I believe the best way to harvest predators is to see them before they see you or smell you. This means you need to camouflage everything, paint your gun with flat paint that won't reflect. You can buy a gun painting kit at most sporting good stores. Glove and face mask are a must, you move these two areas the most during the hunt and you need to conceal them as best you can.

Predator hearing is excellent so don't slam doors. . . Predators hear cars and trucks all the time but when they hear a door slam they associate that with humans, so I lube my truck door hinges at the beginning of every season so that my doors open and close smoothly & quietly. Also, put tape on anything that makes noise, gun slings, stools etc.

A predators sense of smell is absolutely unmatched anywhere in the animal world, they use their noses more than any other sense. Doing any type of hunting you will find that most animals will circle you trying to wind you, this is how the animal identifies what you are. They depend upon their sense of smell more than sight.

A few more things that will help your hunt be a good one. . . fuel up your truck the night before the hunt, that way no fuel vapors on clothes or hands will be problematic, these aren't natural smells out in the boonies. Wash your hunting clothes in baking soda or scent free detergents. When showering use scent free soap and deodorant. Don't eat foods the night before the hunt that will give you gas, if you do you probably won't see any predators and your partner won't be very happy with you either.

If you are a novice hunter being taken out by an experienced caller for the first time REMEMBER they have taken this day to help you and they really want to get you a coyote, so listen to what they're telling you. You will probably leave early in the morning so that you can be on a stand at first light and you will probably be on a stand at dusk, so you'll need to bring a lunch as well as any snacks to get you through the day. Also, with the cost of fuel these days the experienced hunter should not be expected to pay for all of the fuel used during your hunt. He's taking the time to help you, the least you can do is to help out by at least splitting the cost of the fuel used.

These are just some of the things I do and hope they will help you. But remember, everyone does things different, and you can do everything right and still not harvest a predator. If this happens, don't be discouraged, it happens to all of us all the time so don't give up. Keep going out and trying and you will eventually be SUCCESSFUL. I probably have 2 or 3 unsuccessful days for every successful day, that's why it's called hunting not killing.

Good Luck.

Stan

HUNT REPORT

by Dusty Moiser, APC Hunt Chairman

Hello everyone, its that time again, time to lock and load and head for the hills. Our novice hunts this year are on 14 October and 11 November. If you would like to participate, please contact me at the meeting so I can pair you up. As usual I will be needing experienced club members to help out, so let me know if you can. Everyone who signed up for the novice hunt last month please see me during the meeting so I can set you up. I will have maps to the check-in for everyone who needs one. Also I have plenty of blank hunt records for everyone to keep track of there kills. I WILL be asking for these next spring so please fill one out even if you aren't able to get out and kill anything.

By now everyone should know what tags they got or didn't get for this falls hunts. Reminder--- hunt permits for spring javelina, bear, and turkey are due on 10 October. So mark your calendars and start planning your trips.

Last year I put out a list of some of the items that I keep in my truck all season. I've had several people ask me about it so I will go over it again. For starters I carry two spare tires, a healthy assortment of tools, two heavy jacks (including a hi-lift), tow straps, chains, blocks of wood, and several tarps. Also, I have plenty of water, some food, a small stove, lantern and fuel, two sleeping bags and a large first-aid kit. I have the luxury of a camper shell, so I keep my truck loaded from August thru April. Since many of the places that I go may or may not have cell service it's a good idea not to depend on it. I figure that it's better to carry this stuff and not need it, than to need it and not have it. As with most of you that have spent a lot of time in the back country, I've helped others out of a jam more often than I've been in one. So be prepared. This same train of thought applies to every time I leave my truck for a day of chasing elk or even quail. Even when going several hundred yards to call for coyotes, you should have a few simple items in your pockets. When I'm lucky enough to have a big game tag I carry a small day pack. It has enough stuff in it to make spending the night out inconvenient, not life threatening, regardless of the environment. If you want more information about this see me at the meeting.

Be safe, have fun, shoot to kill!!!!

WHAT I DID ON MY SUMMER VACATION - PART 1

by Mike Clerc - Member

My son Christopher graduated from Mt. View High School the evening of Thursday, May 25th of this year; early in the morning on Sunday, May 28th, the two of us boarded a United Airlines jet bound for Washington DC and then eventually Johannesburg, South Africa. This was a trip that had been four years in the making, yet for me, it seemed like the time would never arrive. Four years of scrimping and saving, planning and conniving seemed like an eternity, but ironically, the last three weeks prior to us leaving on the trip, the time absolutely flew by and suddenly it seemed like there wouldn't be enough time to get everything taken care of before it was time for us to leave.

For Christopher, this trip was something that he and I had talked about for the past four years, yet for him it truly seemed like a dream, something that really would never happen. I'd promised Christopher that when (not IF) he graduated from high school, if he wanted to go, I would take him to Africa on a safari. Yet even after his graduation ceremony and the party with family and friends that followed, he seemed almost reluctant to even talk about the trip, for fear of jinxing it. He never really showed any real excitement until we were actually getting out of the car as my wife dropped us off at Phoenix Sky Harbor Airport. That's when the reality suddenly set in. . . that he, or rather we were in fact actually going to making the trip. He was grinning from ear to ear, something he doesn't do very often. Like his father, he's a bit stoic and seldom shows much if any emotion. All that changed the instant he opened the car door at the airport.

For me, this trip would be a two edged sword. This would be a trip that my son and I would be able to share and remember the rest of our lives, something not very many men get to share with their son. It was also a coming home of sorts. . . almost to the day four years prior, I had ventured on my first trip to the Dark Continent, on what was for me a fulfillment of a lifetime of day dreams and wishes, spanning back to when I was in high school in the mid-sixties.

Africa to me was an enchanting place, full of strange and wonderful creatures the likes of which, for me, could only be enjoyed by looking at books, magazines, television programs or the occasional movie. I honestly believed throughout my adult life that Africa or rather hunting in Africa was something that only the rich could afford to do, and for a commoner like myself with a family, a mortgage and a regular job, hunting in Africa was completely out of reach. I was so excited upon my return home from my first trip to Africa, I wanted so badly to share the experience with someone. My wife would have been an excellent choice, but not being a hunter, she thought the entire thing was a waste of time (and money), but Christopher seemed genuinely interested, and wanted to hear all of my stories. So it only seemed logical that I should use his high school graduation as an excuse for me to be able to return to Africa.

The trip to South Africa is a rather long one, but time passes very quickly as the flight is during the night and there isn't much to see out the cabin window, so all that's left to do is watch movies and sleep, dreaming of what you will be doing and seeing in just a few short hours.

Also on the plane are generally a lot of other US hunters heading to South Africa and points beyond for the same thing you are, so you can share stories and expectations with them. All of that activity really leaves very little time for sleep, but it finally comes and believe me, it is welcomed as the days progress. The time difference between Arizona and South Africa is 8 hours. . . they are 9 hours AHEAD of Arizona! It makes for some rather interesting telephone conversations when you call home to share the excitement with your family, and it's something like 3:00am in Arizona and yet it's just the end of the afternoon hunt in South Africa.

We were met at the Johannesburg Airport by representatives of the outfit that we had booked our hunt through. We then packed all of our gear, guns and archery equipment in their trailer, met up with two other hunters heading to the same camp as us, then we were off on the last leg of the journey, a four hour drive through some of the most beautiful African countryside. You strain your eyes as you zip down the roadway looking for some of the African wildlife, and occasionally you will see a Kudu, Zebra, Warthog or the occasional Vervet monkey. Upon arrival at the lodge, we gathered our belongings, and were shown to our rooms and told to get our guns and ammo so that we could go out to their local range to check the sights on our rifles to ensure that they were still spot on after the long journey.

After the trip to the range, they actually took us out on a quick tour of the facility so that we could get an idea of what the lay of the land was like, the thickness of the vegetation, and to maybe, if we were lucky, see some of the elusive African wildlife that we be hunting beginning the next morning.

My son and I were on an eight day hunt, where we could each take five animals of our choice, from a list provided us by the outfitter long before we left on the hunt. For me the choice was an easy one, I had several animals that I wanted to harvest that were "leftovers" from my first trip. For Christopher, it was a tough choice, one that had begun nearly two months earlier when I provided him with the list of available animals along with pictures so that he could see what they looked like. Many people know about Zebra and Warthog and maybe even the Impala, but not everyone knows about Blue Wildebeeste, Tsessebe, Eland, Kudu or even Red Hartebeeste. In fact, to many American hunters the variety of huntable animals in Africa causes the mind to swirl, trying to remember the names and appearances of them all.

Christopher had chosen to hunt for Impala, Zebra, Gemsbok, Warthog and Blue Wildebeest. I had chosen to hunt for Kudu, Eland, Blue Wildebeest, Waterbok and a special hunt that I'll leave for another story.

Christopher was the first to take an animal on the first morning, he made a beautiful 250 yard shot that even impressed his PH (Professional Hunter). I guess that all of the time that we had spent at the rifle range in preparation for the hunt really paid off.

Christopher then continued to show his shooting expertise in taking a Warthog, Blue Wildebeeste and Zebra. Each animal was taken with one well placed shot, ranging from an 80 yard shot on the Warthog to the 250 yard shot for the Impala, 120 yard shot on the Blue Wildebeeste and the 320 yard shot on his Zebra. Each and every animal Christopher harvested was done so with a custom built 30/06 Ackley Improved, using 165gr Hornady Interbond bullets. To say that Christopher's safari was a success would be an understatement. You can see from the wide smile on his face in each of the pictures that he is one happy camper. The only animal on Christopher's "shopping" list that he wasn't able to get was the Gemsbok. It wasn't for the lack of trying, as Christopher and his PH spent day after day covering many miles on foot trying to find them, but they just weren't able to be in the right place at the right time.

One of the interesting aspects of a safari in South Africa is the way we as hunters are treated. There aren't very many "tent" style camps. Where you normally stay is in what's called a "lodge", but the reality of it is that it's more like a four star resort, in that you get three meals a day, all beverages are provided, daily maid service is included as is daily laundry service. It's certainly nothing like the type of hunting "camps" you would get here in the US, not that that is bad, only different, very different! You almost feel guilty about the way you're treated. The people are truly terrific people, very friendly and outgoing. You really don't want for anything while there.

There are more animals than you can imagine, in fact, it really spoils you and makes it very difficult to come back to the US and be excited about hunting here. I'm not exaggerating at all when I say that if you go for more than 5 minutes without seeing one species of animal or another while hunting, you begin to start wondering what's wrong. Where we hunted, in one day of hunting it was possible to see a variety of animals of varying sizes, from the small diminutive Duiker antelope to Giraffe, from Ostrich to Rhino and nearly anything else in between that you could imagine.

In the next installment, next month, I'll cover the animals I was able to harvest, and our trip to Kruger National Park after our hunt.

FOREST SERVICE PROJECTS

from AZ Game & Fish Department

Sportsmen drawn for big game permits in Game Management Units 1 and 27 this fall are advised to be aware of two large-scale work projects being conducted by the Apache-Sitgreaves National Forests (ASNF) that will affect access to some hunt areas and close others, say Game and Fish Department officials.

In Unit 1, from August 14 through December 31, 2006, the Springerville Ranger District is realigning and reconstructing State Highway 273, beginning at the Forest boundary near the Sunrise ski area and extending to Highway 261 at Crescent Lake. During this time, that portion of the roadway between the Fort Apache Indian Reservation and the junction of Forest Road (FR) 554, which is the turnoff to Winn Campground, will be closed 24 hours a day, seven days a week. This includes the Sheep Crossing area. That section of Highway 273 extending east from the junction of FR 554 to Highway 261 will be closed weekly at 6 a.m. on Mondays through 6 p.m. on Thursdays, but will be open Fridays through Sundays during this construction period. Both the Winn and Gabaldon Campgrounds will also be closed Mondays through Thursdays, but open Fridays through Sundays. Hunters can check the hunt unit information document for Unit 1 on the department's Web site for more detailed information on road, trail and campground closures.

In Unit 27, the Clifton Ranger District will conduct a prescribed burn in the Chitty Creek area, below the Mogollon Rim. The burn, planned for 14,000 acres, is scheduled for ignition during the last week of September and will continue for more than three weeks, weather and conditions permitting. The burn area is located west of State Highway 191, extending west along the Rim face south of FR 54 to the Bear Canyon Trail #26 access point. It will extend south along Highway 191 to Strayhorse Campground, then west along Highline Trail #47 to the junction with Crabtree Canyon, and extend south to East Eagle Creek, and again west to McBride Mesa.

Trails into the area will be closed prior to, during the burn and for a short time following the burn to ensure that any hazard trees are removed and that there is no chance of reburn. Hunters are encouraged to check with the Alpine and Clifton Ranger District offices and check local trail kiosks for signage and fire notices.

According to ASNF personnel, restoration of fire-adapted forest vegetation types is the number one priority for the U.S. Forest Service in the Southwest Region, and requires a landscape approach to be effective. Unfortunately, the window to conduct critical prescribed burning for meeting specific resource objectives often coincides with many fall hunts. While posing some inconvenience to some hunters during the burn period, the long-term benefits can be tremendous to wildlife. First and foremost is the expected reduction in natural fuel build up that has occurred in the upper portions of East Eagle, Salt House and Chitty Creeks over the last century. This area is currently very susceptible to damaging effects from uncontrollable wildfire similar to the Rodeo-Chediski Fire of 2002.

DON'S NEVADA BUCK

by Don Martin - Member

Thought I'd send along a couple of photos and the story of the buck I ended up taking on my Nevada antelope hunt. He was our 4th choice actually, but our number 1 (Ghost Buck) & 2 (Big Guy) disappeared, number three (Lucky) got killed by fellow Kingman resident Wayne Asplin on opening day, so wasn't a whole lot of mature bucks left out there where we were at.

He is fairly typical of the bucks in the units we were hunting: decent bases and good mass on the top, but unfortunately no length. He was called the Red Stain buck as someone had put an arrow through his neck during the archery season and you can still see the dried blood on his cape. He had healed up nicely, and despite the scabs on his cape where the arrow had passed through, was in perfect condition.

The good news of course was that I didn't have to shoot more than once! Course its kinda hard to miss when you're in a blind at 57 yards and your 300 Weatherby is resting on a Bogen camera tripod with a sand bag on top. The buck didn't know I was there and as he took a drink of water I dropped him in his tracks.

I have to admit that I did miss a much better buck (Our #2 Big Guy) on the second day of the hunt at 279 yards. He was just starting to run after his does, and despite the admonition from Jay not to shoot over him, the shot went high. Oh well, guess that's why its called hunting and not killing. I've always said I'm much better at finding critters than I am at shooting (guess I have the Dave Nicholson syndrome!)

This is a great hunt for those who have never taken an antelope, and Bruce Hudson can sure figure out how to put you on them, but if you're looking for bigger bucks, might want to look at the areas in northwest Nevada. However, that being said, this buck is going to be used as our "demo" buck in my Hunter Education classes as he is a good representative of the species.

We had a great hunt, and I sure appreciate all the help from those who made this Nevada adventure possible. Bruce, Hans, Jay, Kensen, Pete, you all were great!
